Comment: As we move into more difficult to forecast weather events, local climates and water resource challenges, it is our duty to ensure that the local area is prepared to deal and support the local area. A new reservoir is a tried and tested method to store water for prolonged times of summer drought, store stormwater in increased years of winter rain and alleviate the local resources. We should be celebrating all well considered opportunities that increase the resilience of the local community, and that can provide critical support to our increasingly difficult to manage systems.
