Given the impact of climate change I think it is very responsible for a golf club to invest in collecting and using excess rain water to maintain the golf course. I am aware that this is fairly common practice across Europe and I expect, in years to come, that all clubs will be required to do this rather than relying on the public system.

There are obvious benefits in the winter months when we have too much water and the area floods as well as in the summer months when the water can be put to good use.

This project itself appears to have a minimal impact during construction and provides a very long term benefit not only to the golf club but to everyone in the surrounding area.
